

Historic, Archive Document

Do not assume content reflects current scientific knowledge, policies, or practices.

62,37

No. 32. Hemerocallis Publication by J. B. S. Norton

July, 1949

The previous, No. 31, is: Descriptive Catalogue of Hemerocallis Clones, 1893 to 1948, compiled by J. B. S. Norton, M. F. Stuntz, and W. R. Ballard. June 1919.

CHANGES FROM SPRING PRICE LIST, 1949

J. B. S. Norton, 4922 Fortieth Place, Hyattsville, Md.

Due to moving part of the garden, prices will be 25% lower than those announced in the spring list, during August and September. These two months are generally considered about the best time to plant daylilies.

The following on the spring list are not now available: Carol Ann, Narcissa, Lady Gay, Miss Priscilla, Baronet, Citrina, Gertrude.

A new extra early one is here published for the first time as Aprilet, having been under the number AP for several years. This clone has been as good as other very early ones, but this year was not only the first to bloom, but the best formed and most beautiful orange yellow daylily in the April garden. The scapes are between 1 and 2 feet high; the flowers open wide to about 3 inches. $3.00 each.

This may be a good place to note that the very early daylilies are often not seen in bloom because the buds are killed by late frosts before they get high enough above the ground to be noticed. Covering on cold nights will extend the hemerocallis season a week or two earlier.

A few Garden Lady plants may now be had at $5.00 each. Also some Hyperion at 50 cents.

The correct name for plants disseminated from my garden since 1941 as "Gertrude," seems to be Genevieve, but I do not know where to find any of the true Gertrude for comparison.

